Proposals

Economic – one job for every home

Owenstown is planned to accommodate 8,000 homes and create 8,000 jobs. Its location is chosen to regenerate rural South Lanarkshire, through job creation and stimulating economic activity. How effective do you think a new town can be in creating jobs and helping to regenerate the wider area?

Social – the co-operative principle

Owenstown is to be developed and managed as a co-operative, where the residents would decide what to build and how to run it. How effective do you think the co-operative model will be?

Environment – a zero carbon development

Owenstown aims to be carbon neutral in its development and operation. Initial energy and technology partners have been identified to reduce carbon emissions in the construction and running of the town. Are you confident enough is being done at this stage to achieve these aims?

OWENSTOWN

SOUTH LANARKSHIRE

Owenstown Masterplan

The thinking behind the Owenstown project is that we need to come up with a new way of living to overcome the social, economic and environmental problems we see around us. The eventual size of the town depends on how many people want to live and work there. It will take time to grow and it will only be self-sufficient once it has become big enough to support such things as schools, health centre, shops, offices and jobs so that people who live in the town don't have to commute to work. Expert advice is that the Owenstown project is ambitious but can be achieved. Do you agree?
